'Mirella' Parents Go To School For Night Exhibit

Works by Gertrude Richardson and Florentine artist Mirella are currently featured at the South Bay Art Center, 104 Coral Way. The show will continue through Nov. 6.

Mirella won the first prize and best of show awards at the Del Amo Art Festival, held Sept. 25 and 26 at Del Amo Center. More than 1,000 paintings by top California artists were featured at the show.

"Cesta Dimele" and "Estrellita" are among the featured works now being displayed.

Mirella recently donated a pastel of "Mother and Child" to the United Auxiliary of the Southwest Association for Retarded Children. The painting is now being exhibited at Gardena Valley Hospital.

A member of the Gardena Valley Art Association, Mirella is a native of Florence, Italy. She now resides in Gardena.

Parents Go To School For Night

Parents of students attending Calvary Baptist Elementary School were introduced to teachers and conducted on a tour of the school at a "Back-to-School Night" last week.

The Rev. Earl Kuester addressed the parents before the tour of the school. Parents sat through a shortened version of their youngsters' day in school.

The executive board, chaired by Mrs. Loy Lee Holland, has approved the purchase of an automatic bell system for the school. It will be installed within the next few weeks.

... Let's Go

By LARRY MACARAY

Sometimes the most innocent and naive remark turns out to be the most hilarious and often times impossible to believe. The "classic" as far as I'm concerned occurred in Rome summer before last. We were viewing the massive statue of Moses by Michelangelo when a weary traveler turned to her guide and asked, "How old was Moses when he posed for this statue?"

This jab into my funny-bone was literally topped this week by a gentle little old lady who wandered into our art gallery. Now . . . we get all kinds of funny and strange questions . . . people looking for a painting of a certain size . . . or color . . . or with a particular frame . . . or like the couple who came in hoping to at last find the painting of a man wearing a helmet. Who knows what painting they referred to and also where it hangs today?

This little old lady came in with a single purpose . . . to find a certain painting she had heard about. She didn't remember where she had heard about it . . . but she did remember that it was a portrait of a lady with a strange smile. After the initial shock, I tried to explain that the "Mona Lisa" was a principal attraction of the Louvre in Paris and was definitely not for sale.

THE LOUVRE has always been a favorite museum of mine, especially the "out-lawed" part of the museum . . . the Jeu de Paume. This kind old monument is indeed a shrine of democratic culture. For nearly half a mile along the Seine, the Louvre lifts its roofs to overlook the center of this capital. No royal residence in Europe . . . not even Versailles . . . is more vast and complex.

Like the slender Seine flowing past, twisting and turning out of the ancient core of Paris toward the broad city of modern times, the Louvre is a silent emblem of history. The palace sums up seven centuries of French civilization. No other building in the nation, not even the Notre Dame Cathedral rising a short distance upstream on its consecrated island can do quite as much.

Standing in the gardens of the Louvre . . . I don't think that I have ever seen a more controlled bit of urban space in all the world. The famous Eiffel Tower provides only a side note of emphasis. The main perspective view extends down the central axis of the gardens, through the small Arc du Carrousel, across fifty acres of formal lawn, down rows of chestnut and linden trees, past the still lagoon, to the obelisk of the Place de la Concorde, and then up the long rise of the Champs Elysees to the Arch of Triumph.

OVER 200,000 works of art are packed into this complex structure and over 5,000 are paintings . . . not ordinary paintings but such works as the Mona Lisa by Leonardo da Vinci, Olympia by Manet, The Bathers by Fragonard and Man with Glove by Titian. The Rubens Room must be seen to appreciate the tremendous output that Peter Paul Rubens managed.

Sculpture is by no means forgotten. The glorious sight that the visitor receives upon climbing the first set of stairs is the breathtaking "Winged Victory" more rightfully known as "The Victory of Samothrace" a Greek statue dating from the 4th Century, B.C. Of course one must always check to see Venus de Milo in her private little room. Also Greek, but from only 100 B.C.

In 1808 Henry IV opened the studios on the lower floors of the Louvre's Grande Galerie to hundreds of artists and craftsmen. They actually lived and worked there. Henry had intended these rent-free studios to become "craftsmen, trained by good masters, some of whom would later be dispersed throughout the kingdom, and who would serve the country well." Even today, a visitor can see aspiring artists painting from the old masters. Permission is given with the stipulation that the artist's painting must differ in size from the original.

Olson Named President Of Kiwanis

Councilman H. T. "Ted" Olson has been elected president of the Torrance Kiwanis Club.

Elected with Olson were Phil Halloran, first vice president; Dud Cook, second vice president; Ken Anderson, treasurer, and directors Clyde Baumgarten, Lyle Faldland, and Willis Hadley.

Balloting for two other directors ended in a tie and a run off election has been scheduled. Candidates are Bill Greenawalt, Art Nilsen, and Darold Strand.

AT THE LOUVRE . . . "Venus de Milo," one of the many sculptures which is housed in the famed Louvre museum in Paris, attracts thousands of visitors each year. Larry Macaray, in his Let's Go column today, recalls some of his visits to the museum.

Street Work Approved in Dominguez

Construction will begin shortly on streets in a new tract near Wilmington Avenue and Del Amo Boulevard in the Dominguez area, Supervisor Burton W. Chace has disclosed.

As approved by the Board of Supervisors, the improvements will include pavement, curbs, gutters and drainage facilities costing approximately $220,000.

The project, in Tract No. 29781, will be paid for by the subdivider, Chace added.
